Future Farming in America

Who will be growing food for us in South Carolina 50 years from now?

With the average age of a farmer closing in on 60, this is a question that the leadership in South Carolina agriculture is giving serious attention.

For generations, our farms were family businesses. Many times dad inherited the farm land from his father, and then his children grew up there. Often one or more sons or daughters continued to farm. All over the state, I've seen farmers with a strong love for the land, and watch them rear their children to feel the same. But in many cases, the next generation has left the farm, so today farmers make up less than 2 percent of the population.

Many of the younger farmers who have stayed at the farm have expanded and diversified their operations. That's one of the reasons we established an Office of Agribusiness Development at the Department – to support those with such future plans. Let me mention a few other initiatives that address the issues of supporting dreams of farmers and would-be farmers.

For one, I am pleased that the National Young Farmers Educational Association conference will be held next weekend in Charleston. I think it was last held in South Carolina in the early 1990s. Along with local tours and a fabulous event planned

SC AgriBiz & Farm Expo to Showcase Cattle Industry

Farmers are facing tough economic times, and the 2016 SC AgriBiz and Farm Expo has an agenda designed to help them navigate forward, according to Jody Martin, the show's executive director.

"The Expo will feature educational sessions that will help farmers – large and small – improve their operations and marketing skills during these difficult times," Martin said.

The expo is set for Jan. 13-14 at the Florence Civic Center in Florence. Educational sessions are planned for both days of the show and will cover a variety of topics. One of them deals with the cattle industry.

A Cattle Clinic will be held from 10:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Wednesday, Jan. 13. It will include a session on "Heifer Development & Selection" presented by Dr. Brian Bolt, manager of business development for AgriClear, Inc. Early in the afternoon, two optimization clinics for hay equipment will be held. At 3:30 p.m.,

Bolt will again speak, dealing with the specifics of cattle marketing and the market outlook.

On Thursday, Jan. 14, a key part of the expo is the CAMM Conference, which runs from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Speakers from Clemson's Confined Animal Mature Manager (Camm) program team will present the benefits of using animal manure to grow crops for on-farm biodiesel, and they will share information on how to make biodiesel from crops grown with manure. The day will close with a session on air pollutants associated with swine farms, their impacts, and mitigation. Individuals seeking CAMM recertification can receive 5 credit hours for attending the conference.

"The expo will have educational sessions that will help every farmer in South Carolina and we look forward to a big crowd," Martin said. Other sessions deal with small farmers, increasing efficiency on the farm, new technology, business management, local food markets, and educational classes for the commercial agricultural sector. Vendors are encouraged to secure a booth as soon as possible, since only a few spaces are left. Call Brandie Hayes at 843-230-9061 for vendor information.

For any other information, call show coordinator Miriam Pflug at 864-237-3648, or log on to the expo website at www.SCAgriBizExpo.com.

Clover Farm Woman Receives Order of the Palmetto

Evelyn Edmunds, 87, roams her 300-acre farm in a little red pickup truck, checking daily on a herd of about 55 black Angus cattle that come running when she calls.

"You're outside, you're close to God and you don't have anybody hollering at you," Edmunds said. "But it's hard work, and you're always dirty."

She has spent most of her life running the family's Circle E Farm near Clover, specializing in turkeys, black Angus cattle, and hay. She and her husband, John Edmunds, began farming in 1950. He died of a heart attack in 1978, when three of the couple's six children were still at home.

"We had turkeys in the field, and it was coming November," Edmunds remembers of the day her husband died. The turkeys were sold and she took over management of Circle E Farm with matter-of-fact efficiency.

She has been a mentor for women in agriculture, and has encouraged many local youth to pursue careers in agriculture through 4-H, Scouting and Angus associations.

Evelyn Edmunds

Gov. Nikki Haley recently awarded Edmunds the Order of the Palmetto, the highest civilian honor in South Carolina. Sen. Harvey Peeler presented the award during the annual Partners in Agriculture and Conservation Legislative Dinner in York.

The Order of the Palmetto is given for extraordinary lifetime service and achievements of national or statewide significance. Edmunds was nominated by the York County Soil & Water Conservation District, where she served as a commissioner for 19 years.

Mrs. Edmunds believes the farm was a wonderful place to raise her children, and farming has been a good life. Her son Wesley still lives on Circle E, where he grows the hay and tends to 84,000 turkeys.

"I wouldn't trade it," she said. "I thought when I lost my husband, what would I do? You think you can't make it, but with the Lord helping and working, you can." She would prefer no other way to live her life.

Future Farming in America

at Boone Hall Plantation, participants will be able to visit some outstanding examples of local cotton, peanuts and row crops, assuming we can find some not still flooded from the rains. The Ag Decision Makers College will share insight on South Carolina agriculture, and will be an exchange of ideas with some of the country's best and brightest young farmers.

Another issue is recognizing that land access is critical in the future of farming. At SCDA, we are working on establishing a "Farm Link" program, to match prospective and existing farmers with available farmland in South Carolina. Whether it is through a traditional sale, lease, or other type of partnership, Farm Link will function to achieve the overall goal of keeping land in agricultural use and fostering the next generation of South Carolina farmers. Stay tuned as this program continues to develop.

It's also a given that the future of farming will incorporate more and more technology. I am looking forward to the 2015 SC AgriBiz and Farm Expo, where the theme will be "Rooted in Tradition, Thriving Through Innovation." This phrase accurately summarizes where the agriculture industry is headed. Fortunately most of the younger generation is very tech-savvy, and so are some of the more senior-category farmers. I was inspired to "keep up" with technology by my grandfather who, at 86 years old, attended a seminar featuring the first IBM desktop computer.

Technology includes more efficient irrigation that is controlled by computers and sensors. GPS and computer chips enable farmers to synchronize planting, fertilizing and harvesting. Sensors in the ground can relay how much fertilizer the farmer should apply, as well as exactly how much water he needs, and when. That means efficiency and less input cost, critical to the bottom line. Clemson's research centers all over the state inform farmers about the newest techniques and equipment. We see young people snapping up this information as if it were gold--because to them, it is. Recently, I heard a presenter say that "data was the new oil" -- indicating its value.

So, the future of farming is right here, right now, as we continue to educate our young agriculture leaders.

4-H'ers Win National Horse Bowl Competition

South Carolina's 4-H horse bowl team won the National 4-H Horse Bowl Championship on Nov. 7 in Louisville, Ky. for the first time in South Carolina horse program history.

The Eastern National 4-H Horse Roundup was held Nov. 3-20 at the North American International Livestock Exposition. Hundreds of 4-H youth participate each year in all kinds of contests from showing their livestock to giving speeches. This year's horse bowl drew 80 youngsters from 19 states. South Carolina's 4-H Hippology win last year makes this a second national title in two years.

The winning team included Kristy Waldrep of Charleston, Hailey Mundell of Chapin, Hannah Steele of Chester, Aubrey Miller of Troy and Katherine Ellig of Lexington. Waldrep was named reserve champion and Mundell placed fourth in the individual category. They were coached by Melissa Brundage, Bonnie Steele and Billie Miller.

The horse bowl tests the teenagers' knowledge in horse breeds, anatomy, health, management, and related areas. The South Carolina team clearly earned their title, winning 128 points to the next highest score of 66. Due to a loss in the second round, they had a grueling nine-round battle to the finals, three more than any other team.

Though the Horse Bowlers grabbed the headlines this year, two other South Carolina 4-H'ers also participated in the in the communication division. This national contest requires 4-H'ers to demonstrate a horse-related topic, as well as gauging business knowledge and public speaking skills.

Ashtyn Kinney of Greenwood and Hannah McKinney of Charleston competed in the individual presentation and public speaking contests, respectively. McKinney placed eighth in the individual public speaking category with her speech on equine blindness entitled "Journey into Darkness."

The national 4-H horse program has more than 260,000 participants, making it the largest of 4-H's animal-related programs. Dr. Kristine Vernon of Clemson University, who oversees the 4-H programs, hopes to continue these successful results.

South Carolina's winning 4-H team consists of Hannah Steele, Katherine Ellig, Kristy Waldrep (reserve champion overall) Hailey Mundell (4th place individual) and Aubrey Miller.

Market Link Lets Farmers Accept EBT Cards

One of the USDA's newest programs, Market Link, is successfully giving low-income people access to fresh vegetables while also helping small farmers make more money.

Emily Joyce, marketing specialist for SCDA, explained that Market Link is run through the Farm Market Nutrition Program. She is working with the Department of Social Services and the Department of Health and Environmental Control to sign up small farmers.

Market Link allows farmers to accept EBT cards for the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program, or SNAP, at the three state farmers' markets and at roadside markets across the state. The program encourages the low-income population to purchase fresh fruits and vegetables.

Another exciting component of the program is that small farmers can receive either smart phones or iPads with scanners so that they can easily accept EBT cards. The three-year lease costs $340, but at the end of that time, the farmers can keep the equipment. Or, if a seller already has a smart phone he or she can get a scanner for a nominal fee. The program also gives the farmer a wireless mini-printer to print receipts on the spot.

The new system is easy to use, Joyce said, and it eliminates a lot of paperwork. The customer simply hands over the card, gets it swiped, and gets a receipt. The farmer gets his money without having to go through a middleman.

"This has a two-prong effect," Joyce said. "We want folks to get fresh, local vegetables, and we also want to support small farmers so they can make more money."

When she started the program last December, only 15 farmers accepted EBTs for SNAP. Now, 65 eligible vendors are using the equipment. "We have about 75 percent enrolled, and they are all happy with the results. They're making money," she said.
